Bond Financial

Bond provides an API that connects banks to developers who want to offer banking services. Twillio provides a similar service for developers who want to offer telco services.

Round Size $32 Million

Investment Series Series A

Noted Investors Canaan, Coatue Management

Location San Francisco

Total Raised $42 Million

Founded by the former COO of Twilio, Bond Financial boasts a strong team and an excellent blitzscaling score of 79/100, with potential for a higher score when they bring their product to market. Bond aspires to be "Twilio for banking" which means they want to make it easy for anyone to bundle banking services into their branded offering. It's Fintech at your fingertips. Twilio's market cap is over $40B, and we feel the market potential here is comparable.

The network effects in this case are platform network effects, which we rate as very strong long term, although short term, they are less pronounced. Sales/Distribution will be a challenge, as this is an enterprise sale into emerging use cases, and we see no significant channel beyond the usual systems integrators. The product isn't released, so we are understandably cautious on the product-market-fit score. The remaining elements of the business are all excellent; the market is enormous, and as a cloud service, they get full credit for margins and scaling efficiency. In summary, this has the potential to be the platform of choice for fintech, and we will be taking a closer look as the Series B approaches.

Zetwerk

Zetwerk is an online marketplace that connects contract manufacturers (primarily in India) with industrial customers.

Round Size $21 Million

Investment Series Series C

Noted Investors Accel& Sequoia (A), Lightspeed (B)

Location Bengaluru, Karnataka, India

Total Raised $65 Million

Zetwerk's overall score is 81, which means it is a real candidate to Blitzscale. The company operates a curated marketplace, where it selects contract manufacturers that meet rigorous standards as suppliers, and then makes their capacity available to industrial customers on a contract basis. Today the company has hundreds of industrial customers using the network.

We gave Zetwerk a 10/10 for Network Effects. Each addition to the network increases its value, and each transaction is high value, and highly considered, so buyers and sellers won't switch to a competitor easily. We talked to the CEO, and our initial take is that they have superior product market fit. The company serves a very large market, has high margins, and low operational and organizational scaling friction. Because they have to work hard to find and serve suppliers and customers, we docked points for distribution and ops friction.

This is a series C, so it is likely past our window of opportunity. But the CEO has met Chris and loves the book, and has promised to keep us top of mind for any investment opportunity.
